ABSTRACT OF THE DISCLOSURE

An auxiliary directional light device includes left and right auxiliary signal lights that are to be mounted respectively on upper left and right corner portions of a windshield of an automobile, and that are to be operated in synchronization with a main directional lighting unit of the automobile. The construction as such prevents light emitted by left and right headlights of the automobile from obscuring light emitted by the left and right auxiliary signal lights.